

Teaching Social Skills, Creating Successful Students Accepting a Consequence

Skill to Teach	Accepting a Consequence : This lesson is designed to be taught alongside literature.
Age	High School
Objective	Students will discuss the skill of Accepting a Consequence and will write an essay evaluating the connection between a character's actions, the resulting consequences and how she/he responds to the consequences.
Materials Needed	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Skills poster or skill steps written on board for Accepting a Consequence. • Literature (novel or short story)
Planned Teaching	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Tell students that everyone makes mistakes and that sometimes we learn more from our mistakes than from our good choices. Sometimes, however, when we make mistakes there are consequences. • Give a meaningful example. • Ask students to give school-appropriate examples of possible consequences when they make a mistake at school or at home. • Ask what might happen if they argue with a parent, teacher or coach when there's a consequence. • Tell students that today they will learn how to accept consequences so they can learn from their mistakes and avoid more trouble. • Tell students that then they will take a closer look at the characters in their novel (or short story) and will discuss their choices, consequences and responses to consequences. • Review the four steps to Accepting a Consequence: <ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Look at the person. 2. Say 'Okay.' 3. Stay calm. 4. Don't argue.(Optional)
Practice	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Briefly discuss with the students the choices that various characters have made and the resulting consequences. Discuss how the characters responded to the consequences. Did they accept the consequences? Avoid them? Make life easier or harder for themselves? • Students will then choose a character and write an essay evaluating the relationship between that character's actions, consequences and response to the consequences. How did that affect the character?
Assessment	Use the provided rubric to grade the students' essays for explanation of the character's actions, depth of the social skill and use of grammar.
